SUMMARY OF EVENTS OF THE PAST WEEK

CANADIAN

The price of wheat at the beginning of the week was $1.26. C.P.R. stock stood at 44 1/2.

Two hundred secret service men have been enlisted by the Canadian Government to try to stop smuggling over the United States border. Naturally the names of these men are not known.

The Alberta Government is reported to be intending to take forcible proceedings against the E. D. & B.C. railway.

The Church of England is proposing to take steps to assist in getting immigrants to Canada from Great Britain. The question was discussed at the Anglican Provincial Synod of Ontario in Toronto.

Mr. Bruce Walker is conducting another campaign for immigrants in England on behalf of the Canadian Government. Agricultural immigrants are mostly sought.

A party of Canadian missionaries who have been delayed for the last two months owing to the disturbed conditions in China have now sailed for that country from Vancouver.

Two more prisoners have escaped from the Winnipeg jail from which five escaped recently.

An explosion took place at Newcastle, near Drumheller, at the end of last week, owing to a stick of dynamite being placed close to the door of W. Hopkins' house. The door of the house was shattered and the windows broken, but no one was injured. The explosion is thought to have been due to the Communists.

A number of charges against the fruit dealers in the trial at Vancouver have been dropped by the Crown. These refer to the alleged infractions of the Combines Investigation Act, as to which the defence had pleaded that it was unconstitutional.

Gorman, charged with the robbery of $45,000 from the Royal Bank at Nanaimo, B.C., in last December, were sentenced to eight years' penal servitude and 20 lashes each. They were captured in Seattle, with the assistance of the U.S. police.

General Sir Arthur Currie, in a public speech last week, made the statement that a large number of students going to the Canadian universities were insufficiently grounded in their education and therefore failed to get the best advantage from their university training.

A C.N.R. west-bound passenger train from Winnipeg went off the line near Ituna in Saskatchewan on Monday. Two passenger coaches were overturned and fell down an embankment. Sixteen passengers and two of the train crew were injured, but in only three cases were the injuries serious. The cause of the accident is not certain, but a broken rail may have done it.

A half case of dynamite was found by some boys in Drumheller and was taken possession of by the police. The members of the U.M.W.A. have appealed to the government at Ottawa for protection, and also to other organizations.

On Saturday night a tug boat was sunk off the entrance to Puget Sound off the B.C. coast as the result of a collision caused by the strong tide, and seven of the men on board were drowned.

BRITISH AND IMPERIAL.
Mr. Lloyd George is conducting a vigorous campaign in Great Britain in support of his new nationalization of the land scheme. It is doubtful if the plan will arouse much enthusiasm.

Bugene Sandow, the famous strong man, has died in London from the bursting of blood vessels in the brain. It will be remembered that there were wild rumors during the war of Sandow having been a German spy and having been shot as such, but these were without foundation.

British police raided the headquarters of the Communist party in London last week and arrested six Communist officials and seized large quantities of printed material and documents. This is another move which Sir William Johnson-Hicks, the Home Secretary, is taking against Communism.

A proposal is on foot to make the Wembley Empire Exhibition something in the nature of a permanent Imperial institution, and discussions are now taking place with this object in view. Considerable discussion is taking place in Great Britain as to how far the financial policy of inflation which has been followed there since the war is responsible for the industrial depression in the country. J. N. Keynes, who became prominent in connection with his opposition to the Versailles peace treaty, is putting forward the view that the banking policy is to a large extent responsible for the unemployment in Great Britain.

Professor H. M. LeRoy, a British scientist who was experimenting with the use of gas to destroy harmful insects, has died from the effects of the gas on himself.

The Prince of Wales received a tremendous reception in London on his return from his long tour in South Africa and South America.

Arthur Henderson, the British labour leader, who is visiting Canada, at one of his meetings in Toronto was severely heckled by Communists, but he quite definitely showed in his replies that the Labour Party in Great Britain had no sympathy with them.

A rumor was spread in London last week that Queen Alexandra, widow of King Edward VII, was dead, but this was quickly denied by officials.

The new radio telephone station in Great Britain for transatlantic communication has been set up and it is expected that people will be able to talk for three minutes between England and New York for not more than $5.00. When it is remembered that the old rate for cables was 25c a word, the improvement effected is obvious.

Great Britain has entered a seal plane for the race for the Schneider Cup at Baltimore on Thursday and Friday, which is said to have speed of 225 miles an hour. Considerable mystery attaches to this boat, and her performance will be closely watched.

At Farnborough, the air station in England, a helicopter invented by a Spaniard has flown at 70 miles an hour and succeeded in hovering and descending almost vertically quite gently. It is said that it can rise in space of 20 yards, and will be able to alight on ships' decks and in confined spaces in cities. If it can do so, it will mark a great advance in the art of flying.

FOREIGN

The French offensive operations in Morocco have ended for the winter, and the French army will strengthen the lines which they have now reached and abandon the offensive.

The Interparliamentary Union Conference, which has been holding meetings in Washington, moved to Ottawa, and in the House of Commons discussed the question of the rights of minorities and of the League of Nations.

It is reported that the French Government is not going to accept the United States for the payment of the French war debt, but that it is going to submit another proposal.

The International conference in Switzerland has resulted in an agreement between Germany and the Allied nations. Germany, France and Belgium will join in an agreement not to disturb the territorial arrangement in the Rhineland, and Britain and Italy will guarantee this agreement.

France will make separate treaties with Poland and Czechoslovakia, her allies in Eastern Europe, for their protection.

Great enthusiasm greeted the signature of the new security treaty at Locarno. There were music, dancing and fireworks to celebrate the occasion. M. Briand, the French Foreign minister, is said to have made one of the finest speeches of his career at the close of the Conference.

Dr. Stresemann, the German Foreign minister, declared that Germany would loyally live up to the agreement.

In China there is strong evidence that fresh civil war is going to break out. Shanghai has been occupied by 10,000 troops of one of the rival factions without any fighting. The main garrison seems likely to be between Chang-Tse-Ling, the governor of Manchuria, and Feng-Yu-Tsang, who is in control of Peking. The port of Tientsin is threatened with bombardment by unpaid sailors on Chinese warships.

It is believed that the headquarters of the illicit liquor smugglers on the Atlantic coast has been shifted from New York to the Florida coast.

It is stated in Washington that the naval forces employed against the Italian smugglers have been successful in capturing 230 seagoing ships engaged in the traffic and more than $10,000,000 worth of rum.

The Greek government has instituted a free zone in the port of Salonika through which other Balkan nations can import and export merchandise without any customs formalities or duties, thus giving them to some extent the equivalent of access to the Aegean Sea for trading purposes. It is hoped by Greece that this new trading place will bring about the alteration of existing territorial arrangements in the Balkans and promote peace.

United States troops have intervened in Panama to suppress civil disorders caused by a movement to refuse payment of rents. No serious fighting has taken place.

M. Herriot, the late Socialist prime minister of France, has definitely declared himself in favor of a capital levy to deal with the financial crisis in France. It is thought that M. Caillaux, the present finance minister of France, may find considerable difficulty in remaining in office in face of the opposition which he is now meeting.

Severe condemnation is expressed by a number of American public men and alms of the conduct of the American flying men who have taken service with the French against the Moors.

The shortage of anthracite coal in the eastern United States has become acute.

A tremendous storm has swept over Kentucky and has done great damage, several small towns being very largely destroyed.

It is reported that an Italian aviator will try to fly across the Atlantic in the latter part of November. He is understood to be going from Genoa via the Azores to South America.

A great Communist plot has been discovered in Poland with its headquarters in Vilna. It is believed to have been planned in association with the Russian Soviet leaders.

The French Government took such elaborate precautions in respect of police arrangements that the funeral of the Communist killed in last week's riots in Paris and buried there Sunday, was not marked by any disturbances as had been feared.

The security conference at Locarno was marked by social fraternization between British, Germans and French to an extent that has not been taken place since the war, and an atmosphere of real cordiality seems to have been established, which may mark an end of the bitterness left by the war.

DEATH OF MRS. THOS. SMITH

On Sunday died Mrs. Thomas Smith of Balmoral in the Red Deer Hospital. She had been ailing for a considerable time. Mrs. Smith was the wife of Mr. Thomas Smith and came with her husband to Alberta about 30 years ago from Ontario, of which she was a native, having been born in Bruce county. Mr. Smith was for some years a Presbyterian Church minister in the Morinsville and Calgary districts, and was at the federal election in this district for the last year before it was closed. He then bought a farm in the Balmoral district, where he and Mrs. Smith have since lived. Their only daughter, Janet, died about two years ago. Their son is now living with his father on the farm. Mrs. Smith was widely respected, and her death will be sincerely regretted among many friends.

The funeral is taking place at the Presbyterian church at 2 p.m. today.

THE LATE MR. THOS. BIGHAM

The following appreciation of the late Mr. Thomas Bigham of Sylvan Lake has been sent by an old friend: Last Sunday, October 11th, another Western pioneer—and one of the best—passed on to his fatherland.

In the person of Mr. Thomas Bigham, who was 73 years of age. Originally from Galt, Ontario, early in life Mr. Bigham migrated to the bush country of the state of Michigan, where he drew a farm from the primeval forest.

Coming to Alberta in 1902, he again tackled the timber, and on near Sylvan Lake, where he has successfully farmed ever since.

An upright, kindly, God-fearing man, as he approached the end of his life on earth, although full of physical ailments, he was happy in the enjoyment of a peace of mind which some others, better endowed with this world's goods, might well be envious of.

SENTENCED FOR ARSON
Derv Ringham, a farmer from the Doverscourt district, was last week sentenced to two years' imprisonment at Edmonton by Judge Taylor for having induced another man to burn his (Ringham's) house in order to obtain the insurance money.

CRIMINAL COURT
On Saturday Chief Justice Simmons, the adjourned case of the man Adams charged with carnal knowledge of a young girl was tried. The accused was convicted and sentenced to seven years' penal servitude. W. E. Payne, K.C., acted for the Crown, and J. R. McClure defended.

Our sympathies are certainly with the young lady whose automobile horn made such terrible remonstrances with the world on Monday afternoon. When the horn was blown it refused to quit until it saw the crowd that gathered to find out what was the matter, one would have thought that it was a political meeting.

THE WESTERN GENERAL QUESTION

In the first table of estimates made by Mr. Brown and given in our issue of last week, the sum of $3,268 for taxes was omitted, although the total was brought out correctly. The Council think that it is sound business to charge the proposed public utility with taxes in arriving at an estimate of its probable result to the city.

Dr. Dorsey was a week end visitor to Red Deer.

Mr. C. Mills was in Red Deer for the week end.

Mr. and Mrs. Cliff Malcolm and Jackie are paying a short visit to town and staying with Mr. and Mrs. John Malcolm.

Inspector Scott of the A.P.P. is enjoying a two weeks' vacation in Red Deer. He states that it is the first holiday he has had for eight years.

Mrs. Frank Miell returned to Prairie Creek last Friday. Mrs. Miell has not been keeping too well of late, but it is hoped that she will soon be quite all right again.

M. C. Milley, lieutenant of the Salvation Army, has come to Red Deer. He is replacing Lieutenant Crego, recently transferred, and will be joined here in a week or two by Captain Sutherland from Calgary.

B. C. Lewis, of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., was in Calgary last week attending a meeting of the Company's agents in connection with a competition which the Calgary district, to which Red Deer belongs, won three out of five prizes.

Miss Alberta Malcolm and Miss Myrtle Blades are back from their trip to the coast and report having enjoyed themselves immensely. Miss Blades picked her first apple of the tree and says it was the best she ever ate.

G. M. Pugh is being moved to the Bank of Commerce branch at Grum, and his place is being taken by H. F. Johnson, from Crossfield. A number of friends arranged a pleasant little farewell social evening for Mr. Pugh on Friday to express their regret at his leaving. It was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Key and all present had an exceedingly pleasant time.

THE WEATHER
The uncertain border weather continued in the past week. There was heavy rain on Wednesday night and Thursday morning, and a report from Friday snow fell all Saturday morning. Since then it has been dry, and Monday and Tuesday were delightful days, bright and mild, but it did not look at all too settled. Threshing has been going on as far as possible since the weather. The wet weather is not extend far to the north. Motorists coming from the south over the week end reported no snow up till a little to the north of Blackfalds. There has been frost on several nights.

CONSERVATIVE LADIES' RALLY
About fifty ladies gathered in the McBride Hall yesterday afternoon under the presidency of Mrs. La France to hear Mrs. Stewart and Mrs. Reg. Smith of Calgary put the Conservative cause before the ladies' point of view. Both ladies are accomplished speakers and made most effective addresses. While the main arguments were more or less those already put forward by the Conservative leaders, they emphasized the need for a permanent organization of the ladies of the district to keep the party's views before the women of the community, whose acquisition of the vote has imposed on them an obligation to make themselves intelligently familiar with the public questions which affect the country.

ROTARY CLUB

At the Rotary Club luncheon Taylor Statten, the well known expert on Boy's Work, was the speaker. An unusually large number of guests were present, as well as a very full turnout of members to hear him. On being introduced by President Will Lord, Statten Taylor said that his speeches were practically all on the subject of boys' work, a subject in which all Rotary clubs take an interest. It was desirable that the club should act as pioneers in this field and should be careful not to overlap the work of other organizations and particularly that of the churches, which could do this work well and wanted to do it. He himself worked with the representatives of both Protestant, Roman Catholic and Jewish churches. In time he felt that the churches would accept the full responsibility of this work of character building among boys, but there were always some boys who were getting into trouble and straying away from the churches, and these the Rotary clubs should look after. They should also keep in touch with the magistrates and the courts and do what they could for delinquent boys of those who were on the way to becoming delinquents. The members of the club should play the part of big brothers to these boys. They might also give their help to boys' athletic meetings, in which team work played the chief part, and which were now being fostered all over Canada. For the clubs the most important work could be done with the boys in their own homes and at their work. It was desirable, and he and those who associated with him kept it in view, to obtain among the boys they worked with a discipline which was not merely blind obedience such as that of the famous Casabianca, but possessed also the qualities of intelligence and initiative.

In their work of character building it was found that four main lines should be kept in view: (1) positive suggestion as opposed to a policy of negative prohibitions. They should try to head the boy off from wrong courses by suggesting to him more desirable things rather than by a continual policy of saying "don't." (2) Co-operation, which meant trying always to be on the boy's side rather than antagonizing him by opposition; (3) Faith, which involved trying to create in the boy a feeling of self-respect. Undue criticism and fault-finding were a mistake. Attempts should be made to get the best out of the boy. Statten Taylor gave several examples of how this had been done by appealing to what was best in the boy without allowing him to realize his faults and shortcomings. (4) Approval, which meant being slow to find fault and ready to praise.

These lines of policy in his view amounted merely to the following of the teaching of Christ, in the history of whose life and teachings examples of all these could be found. (Applause.)

Ernie Payne moved the vote of thanks to the speaker in a few short but very sincere sentences.

ORGANISATION OF HOCKEY CLUB

At an enthusiastic meeting of hockey supporters held in the City Hall last Friday evening, the following officers were elected to pilot Red Deer's hockey craft for the coming season: Hon. President, Mayor Johnson; president, Harold Levander; vice-president, Ernest Greg; secretary, Roy Pidgeon; manager, Dr. Long; coach and referee, C. Hewson; executive committee, George Elby, Irwin Hamley, W. C. Prentiss and Fred Turnbull. The Club's hope to organize a league this season, and with such a magnificent building as the arena in which to display their prowess, the hockey boys are out to give the local fans the best team Red Deer has ever had. Most of last year's season are still available, and we are further favoured with the arrival in our city of several other stars who formerly made good at Lacombe, Edmonton, Stettler and Crossfield. As soon as ice is available on Gutz Lake, a consistent program of training will be undertaken to put the boys in tip-top shape. The players ask your support, the club needs your support, so let us make the winter a big hockey season in Red Deer and start the arena off with a bang.

PROVINCIAL CONSERVATIVE CONVENTION

At the above convention, held last night in the McBride Hall, W. E. Payne, K.C., was chosen as the Conservative candidate for this constituency at the next election for the Alberta legislature. A full report of the convention will be given in our next issue.

LIBERAL MEETING IN RED DEER

A meeting in support of the Liberal candidate, Mr. McFischer, was held in the McBride Hall on Monday evening and was addressed by the candidate and the Hon. Charles Stewart, Minister of the Interior. It is regretted that a full report cannot be given owing to unexpected pressure on our advertising space, but the arguments followed the usual party lines.

ARMISTICE DAY OR POPPY DAY, THE DAY OF REMEMBRANCE

The local G.W.V.A. has arranged to supply the public with wreaths, sprays and poppies through its vice-president, Mr. P. E. Kent, who will have control of the poppy campaign. Beautiful wreaths and sprays will be sold at from $1.00 upwards, large and small poppies at 25c and 10c each. The proceeds go entirely to the war work. Samples may be seen at Kent's decorating store, and orders will be received there and at Phone 311. In order to secure a supply, it is desirable that orders should be placed early. Don't forget the Day of Remembrance.

FLOUR MILL IN RED DEER

Meeting to Arrange Scheme of Vital Importance to Farmers

A meeting of the Board of Trade will be held in the City Hall, Red Deer, at 8 p.m. on Saturday evening 24th October, to receive the report of the committee appointed to investigate the question of establishing a flour mill in Red Deer, and to take steps towards the definite carrying out of the proposal. This is of particular importance to the farmers of this district, and their attendance is specially requested.

CORRESPONDENCE

To the Editor of The News:
Dear Sir:

The Honourable Charles Stewart filled my breast with a burning enthusiasm when he came right out in meeting on Monday night and said: "There were very few men who would go as far as he in easing the burden of tariff on the people," but this ardour was somewhat dampened when I recalled the fact that the Hon. Mr. Stewart helped (for the sake of the Grand Old Liberal party) to bring Progressive measure for reduction of the tariff on automobiles, and when I remembered the little six million dollars profit that Henry Ford has just announced and taken over the Michigan to spend, I just—Oh, Charles, how could you? Et tu, Brute!

And when I heard Mr. Stewart recounting the agony he went through in the Liberal effort at economizing and remembered the five million dollar bid for the Quebec river, I just thought, "O consistency, thou art a jewel, but you sure ain't got no platform setting in the interior of the Minister of the Interior."

Yours truly,
FARMER.

B.Y.P.U. SOCIAL EVENING

On Tuesday night of this week the B.Y.P.U. of the Baptist Church met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jackson for their monthly social evening. The program was made up of community singing, games and musicals. The evening took the form of a farewell social for Mrs. C. D. Locke and Mr. Munson, who are both leaving this month.

ELECTION NOTE

Comment is being made in various quarters as to the ready which is marking the election in this district at any rate. Conservatives, Liberals and Progressives are chaffing one another with the utmost good humour and without any hint of bitterness. With the few exceptions noted, the evening took the form of a farewell social for Mrs. C. D. Locke and Mr. Munson, who are both leaving this month.

Told After Supper

(The following are some notes of experiences related by two residents of this district who have had wide experience in hunting and living in the more remote and unsettled parts of Canada in past years.)

Before I came to Alberta, said C-I spent several years in Northern Ontario in that part of the country which has now been opened up by the lines of the Canadian National and the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railways. These lines had not been built in those days, and the country was to all intents and purposes an uninhabited waste. It was some what indefinitely known that considerable mineral wealth in silver and gold was to be found in these regions, but the great finds which made the wealth of Cobalt and Porcupine had not yet come. Scattered prospectors, however, in ones and twos, and with little in the way of resources or money, traversed the country. In addition to them, the agents and employees of the Hudson's Bay Company ranged over the area, and scattered parties of Indian hunters, and the country was very much of a solitary wilderness. There were no roads, and all travel had to be done either by the rivers and creeks, or on foot through the woods where the going was extraordinarily difficult, and all equipment had to be packed on the backs of the travellers.

The loads which some of the packers could carry would seem incredible to the ordinary man. I once met in my wanderings a young man, a wilderness man who was counted among the whole country, if not, indeed, of the whole Hemisphere. I cannot remember exactly how weight which he was said to have carried on his shoulders, but I am not mistaken, to somewhere about 800 to 900 pounds. He was a gigantic man, but I saw that he was more or less of a physical wreck. He was practically blind, this fellow being thought to have been caused by the pressure of the timber across his forehead—which is the usual method by which packers secure their loads on their shoulders. I do not know whether this is a correct explanation from a medical standpoint of the blindness which had come on the old man, but that was what was generally thought among the other packers. I have been interested to point out that the first sign of a failure of strength and incapacity to carry the great load showed itself in his knees, which began to give way under the great burdens which he tried to carry. Some of these packers were in the wilderness more than a year at a time without seeing anybody except the one or two members of their own party. I remember on one occasion when my partner and I were making our way north in the wilderness, we met a party of these packers coming out, and their delight and amazement when they found had been comparatively recently in touch with civilization was an indication of the extreme strain involved in prolonged solitude in the wilds with only two or three companions and no change whatever of society.

My partner and I were prospecting for gold and silver, and we found several quite promising veins, but only from one of them did we realize any thing like a good profit. The chief difficulty was our own lack of capital and the inaccessibility of the places where we found the indications of the precious metals. Some of the prospectors did make finds from which they reaped quite large financial harvests, but on the whole it was with us and others of the same occupation as it usually is with pioneers in every walk of life—we sowed and others reaped.

The life which we had to lead on these exploring expeditions could not be described as luxurious. Owing to the difficulty of transportation which I have already alluded to, we had to considerable regret, and I do not consider that the years which I spent in the wilderness of Northern Ontario were wasted years.

I, also, said S-I have had some experience of the wilderness, and in the course of it I came across the following story. In a small shack in the woods there lived an old man. He was a hunter and trapper of much experience and skill, and the occasional sportsman who came to his part of the wilderness used to make a point of visiting him, and either enlisting his services as a guide or listening to some of the stories that he had to tell about his past experiences.

The shack was a small one and furnished as barely as such shacks usually are. In one corner of it close to the stove there hung a bear trap which never appeared to be used or moved from its position, and one of these summer visitors had on several occasions asked the old man why he kept the trap hanging there and whether he ever used it to catch bears. The questions never were answered, the old man turning them off in one way or another. There came, however, an evening when, after a tiring day in the woods, the old man and his visitor returned to the shack for the night, and the visitor produced from his baggage a flask of excellent liquor and gave the old man a generous helping.

Whether it was the liquor that opened his heart or whether it was from some other cause does not matter, but in any event when supper had been finished and the two men were sitting by the fire smoking, the old man said to his visitor: "You have several times asked me why I keep that bear trap hanging there and I have never used it. I do not use it, and I hang there because in that far corner my four-legged friend has been when the day's work was done just as we are sitting now. He had been just as the visitor returned to his pipe, and we went along together exceedingly well.

One year we got to know that there was in our hunting area an aboriginal which was accompanied by two-yearling bears and a little cub and these were constantly together and living with in hunting range. We therefore set out to try to trap them, but before we had been on their trail for long we discovered that the old bear, which was the leader of the party, was an animal of quite unusual sagacity. The ordinary devices which we had devised to catch one or other of them finding their way into our traps, seemed to be quite useless against the leadership of the old bear. On one occasion with the two yearlings on one occasion with the cub, the old bear came to the trap and, without the loss of fur and skin. On another occasion she left a claw behind her paw, and after these two experiences she became so obviously on her guard that we were unable to catch her. It was almost useless to try to catch her. Trap after trap was carefully set out, but the old bear was so cunning without any injury to the animals. It went on in this way all through the season, and we were unable to catch the bears. One of the yearlings, evidently grown presumptuous, and ignorant of the danger which he was in, went into one of our traps, and was duly despatched, but the other three were able to keep immune against all our efforts.

The year went on and winter began to approach. Once winter had set in, the old bear would no longer be able to escape, and as the bears would have retired to their dens to sleep, we were able to catch them. However, we failed to take up the traps before the snow came. It was an unusually early winter, and the snow came down in a heavy fall. We realized it there was a considerable chance of our not being able to get our traps buried. My partner decided that he would make the round trip to the den of the old bear, and the snow and take them up for the winter, and accordingly on one morning he set out alone for the trap, leaving me to occupy myself otherwise about the shack.

When evening came he had not returned, and the night grew dark. I was not at first uneasy, as I knew that my partner was a highly experienced woodsman. The trap line covered a considerable distance, and I thought that in all probability he would be able to find his way to the open where he would be able to make sufficient fire through the night to keep himself warm.

At the same time, so anxious and so stormy was the night, that I gradually felt a growing anxiety and with my mind there came one of those feelings that sometimes comes over us, that something was wrong, and I ought to go in search for my partner. However, I dismissed this feeling from my mind as far as I could, and told myself that it was all nonsense and that he would only resent my coming trailing after him through the night as if he was a youngster unable to look after himself. Possibly my attitude was dictated to some extent by a real unwillingness to face the cold and the darkness rather than by my partner's pride in his woodcraft. At any rate, I have never ceased to reproach myself with my behavior on that night.

I made up my stove fire and went to bed, but I failed to sleep as soundly as usual. Several times I woke up through the night, and though I am not a nervous or imaginative man, it seemed to me that I was hearing an insistent influence preventing my resting through the night, and however much I might struggle with myself that it was all nonsense, the feeling remained.

Finally with the first streak of dawn I got up to make myself breakfast and started out for the trap-line. It was still exceedingly cold, and the snow was deep, but I found the tracks of my partner's footprints of the previous day and so was able to follow the route which he had taken quite easily. I found the places where he had located and taken up several of the traps, and I had covered a great part of the trap-line when suddenly I saw my partner a little way ahead of me lying on the snow. I hastened up to him, and as soon as I reached him I knew that the forebodings of the previous night had been only too true, and that a dreadful tragedy had taken place. He was quite dead and frozen stiff, and both hands were firmly caught in the teeth of the great bear trap.

It was only too clear what had happened. He had come rather late in the previous day to this spot where almost the last of the traps had been placed. He had evidently searched around under the snow for it with his hands. Perhaps he was tired, perhaps the growing cold of the night urged him to make haste and made him careless. In any event in the course of his groping he caught the trap beneath the snow and it had closed on both his wrists.

A bear trap is a thing of great weight and strength. It has to be so, and it has to be firmly fastened down in order to prevent such an enormous strong animal as a bear from either wrenching its leg free or escaping with the trap and all. Once caught a man is perfectly helpless either to free himself or to get away, and my poor partner must have realized from the outset that his case was hopeless. The supremely terrible feature of the tragedy became more apparent when on looking more closely I saw that one of his wrists was almost gnawed through. He had apparently realized that his only hope was to gnaw his own wrists through and to get away before he froze to death. What an appalling task this must have been! It is unnecessary to explain. He had obviously not about it, and had almost succeeded in severing the bone of one wrist when cold and exhaustion had overcome him and he had ceased to struggle. How long that painful struggle lasted, I do not know. I have tried to keep from thinking of it.

I freed him from the grasp of the trap, and I took his body home, and buried him, and I hung the trap where you are now, over the place where it used to sit, and I have never touched it since. As you may imagine, the fact that it is not a source of pain but pain to me, but in as much as I failed to go out on that night when I felt in my inner heart that he needed me, so I have felt that I should keep the trap there as a perpetual punishment for my failure to go out that night. I have another word knocked out of his pipe and turned away to his bunk, while his visitor, respecting his silence, also went off to his bed.

BOARD OF TRADE LUNCHEON

The Hon. George Hoadley speaks on the Empire Exhibition

On Thursday last the Board of Trade Luncheon was addressed by the Hon. George Hoadley, Minister of Agriculture in the Alberta Government. He had the honor to be Premier Greenfield would speak, but on account of Cabinet business he was unable to be present, and Mr. Hoadley took his place at very short notice. There was a large attendance at the luncheon, the McBride hotel dining room being filled practically to capacity. The President, H. Wilson, after luncheon called on G. W. Smith, M.L.A., to speak, and Mr. Smith in a few sentences explained that the Premier had been detained in Edmonton by unexpected business. Mr. Hoadley had taken his place. It was a matter of great regret to the Premier that he could not be present but he had a very friendly feeling toward Red Deer and its people. Mr. Wilson then introduced Mr. Hoadley to speak.

Mr. Hoadley echoed the words of Mr. Smith as to the regret of the Premier at not being present. He said that he felt it best to speak on a subject wholly removed from controversial politics, and therefore he proposed to say something of his visit to the Empire Exhibition at Wembley last year. He went to Wembley as the representative of Alberta, but not at the expense of Alberta, but at that of the Dominion. The Empire Exhibition was the idea of Lord Strathcona, one of the greatest of Canadians, who put it forward in 1913. The Great War interrupted the preparations, but after it was over these were resumed.

tween the ages of 12 to 16 who were taken there under escort of older guides. This was done so that the idea of the Empire's greatness should be impressed upon them at an age when their minds were most capable of receiving and retaining impressions.

Lord Strathcona's conception of the Exhibition was a great one, and the carrying out of that conception was great also. The Stadium planned on the model of the Coliseum of Rome contained seats for 125,000 people. On Empire Day he had the privilege of listening to 10,000 voices singing in that stadium to the accompaniment of a band of 500 pieces, and he had seen the march past of the representatives of all the Empire's regiments. When the Air Force contingent was standing at attention and saluting the King, one man fainted and fell to the ground, but no one in the ranks stirred even to look at him. Only the St. John's Ambulance detachment came swiftly forward and carried him away. It was discipline such as this that was present in the Old Contemptibles in the critical days of the Great War. He saw also a detachment of all the Highland regiments, marching past to the music of their pipes, and a most inspiring spectacle it was. An American sitting beside him expressed an opinion to that effect, and said that such music would make any people fight. He had taken the opportunity to say that it took a long time to make some people fight even with such music. The Palace of Engineering and Industry covered 23 acres. They were 900 feet long, with roofs all made of glass, and 1,000 tons of material had gone to their construction. The plans for the buildings had been drawn by 25 different architects of the Empire, who had laid aside petty jealousies in order to build the greatest of buildings for their land. Of their expense he had been shown that if there were a national object in view, the most impossible people could be got to co-operate. The Exhibition's amusement park covered 47 acres, and in order to feed all the people there were 50 restaurants when he first went there, and four more were added while he was staying there. (Laughter.) When the question of catering for the Exhibition restaurants came up bids were asked for and none sent. The Lyons Company were asked if they would undertake it, and they said yes, and explained that they did not send in a bid because they knew that no one else could undertake the work. The Lyons Company paid £250,000 for the catering privileges, and £1,000,000 for each additional restaurant put up. The people to be fed each day numbered 150,000.

He had been in the House of Commons when the questions of the resumption of imperial preference had been discussed, and had heard Messrs.

Thomas, Baldwin, Asquith, Ramsay MacDonald, Snowden and A. Chamberlain speak on the subject. He had been impressed with the expeditious manner in which questions were disposed of in the House.

He had visited also Denmark, the home of agricultural co-operation, because he himself was a great believer in co-operation. The question of co-operation was not merely a matter of literature published to the people. It was also a matter of national feeling. Denmark had the advantage of being self-contained, a single race, with a balanced system of agriculture, which might be illustrated by the fact that farmers made a point of keeping stock in suitable proportions. For example, 600 pigs to take the skin milk available from the number of cows on the farm. It was a small country, with only 15,000 square miles as compared with the 230,000 square miles of Alberta. It was nevertheless more difficult for the Danish farmer to make money than for our farmers as far as natural conditions were concerned. Of their cereals, 60 per cent were brought from North America. They were compelled to use fertilizers for their land. Of their exports, 90 per cent were agriculture, and agriculture was not looked upon as an inferior occupation, but as one of the most honorable of all. Of all the eggs imported into Britain 45 per cent came from Denmark, and 50 per cent of the butter. This had been done by co-operation, and not only in agriculture, but in all national problems. The Government, which had been in existence for 30 years, had representatives of labor, agriculture, finance and industry, and it gave satisfaction to the people. All each interest was in protection for the interests of Denmark and justice for each enterprise, but not at the expense of the others. Behind all this was a national system of education under which any man at any age was able to return to school if he wished to get more information on any subject, and returning would also receive training in character and realization of the national unity and aspiration. It became his duty to co-operate to bring about the unity and prosperity of the whole nation. That spirit was the greatest thing in the world. In that spirit we could all try to leave something behind us and to help the Empire which we all help to create. It was a pleasure to have the chance to thank Mr. Hoadley on behalf of the city for his unvarying kindness and consideration with which he and other members of the Government treated any application made by the city. The Government had helped the city with its roads and bridge problems, and in a number of small things had helped to bring the citizens of Red Deer in touch with their Government, and for that the thanks of Red Deer were due to the Government. (Applause.)

Mr. Wilson formally expressed the thanks of the meeting to Mr. Hoadley, who shortly acknowledged the same.

TO OUR READERS

We would ask each of our readers to examine the address labels on their papers in order to ascertain whether their subscription to the paper is paid up to date, and if it is not, to send in the amount owing as soon as possible. It is not easy to remind separately each person who is in arrears, and while each such may consider that the few dollars he or she owes are not worth bothering about, yet in the aggregate they may amount to a great deal and be of considerable importance to the paper. It is only fair if the paper is read that it should be paid for, and we therefore take this means of asking our readers not to overlook the matter.

THE THEATRE QUESTION IN RED DEER

It is satisfactory to learn that there is now no likelihood of any difference of opinion between the City and the proprietor of the Rex theatre as to the repair of the burnt building. It is understood that Mr. Culford, who bought from Mr. Headren, is going to build a new theatre in the spring, which will satisfy the requirements of the City regulations with respect to its fireproof character, and that in the meantime the old Empress Theatre will be used. The Council quite rightly interpreted their duty and the feeling of the general body of citizens when they refused to give their authority for the reconstruction of the old building on lines similar to its old state. It was felt that in its former condition the theatre was a perpetual danger, and that if it could possibly be prevented, it should not again be used in such a condition.

It is high time that Red Deer had an up-to-date theatre. The old one apart from its lack of fireproof construction, had such a limited stage and such comparatively poor acoustic qualities that it made the production of plays and even more of musical programmes subject to heavy limitations. Travelling companies were naturally most unwilling to give performances in such a theatre, and some local entertainments, which would naturally have been given in the theatre, were given in places better adapted for hearing, but less suitable in other respects. It is to be hoped that the new building, when it comes to be built, will be free from the defects of the old.

It is quite important for any town to have a good theatre. After all, the moving pictures ought not to take the places of either the spoken drama or of concerts and other musical entertainments, especially the kind of moving picture which forms the greater proportion of the available supply. Theatre proprietors may make the most careful selection of their pictures, but even the best selection is bound to obtain more than a limited number of pictures which are of anything like good value in any respect except that of superficial entertainment. The person whose theatrical experience consists of the average moving picture, is in much the same position as the person whose reading is limited to the novels of Ethel M. Dell and similar popular writers, or of the person whose food consists mainly of lead cakes and chocolates. It is good for people to see really first-class plays performed and to take an occasional hand at performing in such themselves. Both amateur dramatic clubs and operatic societies are good and healthy forms of social activity, but for their encouragement they need in the first place a suitable theatre to perform in. If the new theatre comes to be built, as is apparently now planned, it would be a good thing if steps were taken to give the proprietor as much local support as possible in respect of local performance.

It is much to be hoped that the new theatre will be a place where the arts—much as local support as possible in respect of local performance. It is always assuming that he wants such. Something in the nature of a joint organization of the season's entertainments to avoid clashing, and to combine all the resources in respect of music and other kinds of entertainments would seem to be desirable. Now that we have a mayor who is himself one of our best performers in this respect, it might be a good time to get such an organization set on foot.

ON STANDING TOGETHER

Mr. Headley, the Minister of Agriculture in the Alberta Government, made two speeches in Red Deer last Thursday. One was a non-political speech to the Board of Trade. The other was a political address to the meeting in the interest of the provincial Farmers' Party. In both speeches there occurred a note which is worth consideration. That note was the suggestion of co-operation or standing together, and it was sounded not merely in connection with the prevailing movement for co-operative marketing, but in a wider sense of public and national life in general. It is an entirely admirable note, and a quality in it refreshingly free from the harsh discords of political controversy which are at present sounding all over the country. If such a note could dominate over all others, the whole tone of our social life would surely have added to it generosity and understanding. It was imported into the discussion of political questions, what would be the practical effect? As things now are, the average citizen who takes any interest in politics chooses a side, states his opinions with varying degree of vehemence, and assumes, either seriously or with jocular fury, that all those who take another side are at best fools, and at worst deliberate knaves. Is there not another way and a more excellent way? Might it not be possible to assume that those who differ from us are actuated by only the highest motives, and instead of looking for all the weak points in their policies or the flaws in their arguments, and then showing these up in the glaring light of invective or ridicule, might it not be a healthier thing to look for all the good points, all the beliefs held in common, all the aims which can be pursued together, all the means by which difference can be reconciled, and antagonistic interests adjusted to one another in the possible common advantage?

Such a spirit is found amongst communities in times of great emergency. It was found amongst the allied nations during the world war, when not only was there a more or less general political truce within each nation, but as between the allied nations there was a studied attempt made to find all that was best in the action of one another and reduce the points of friction and criticism to a minimum. It was only by such a policy that in the end victory was achieved in the war. The moment the strain was removed and freedom given to spirit of individual self-seeking and the expression of carping fault-finding, progress became immensely retarded, and the result was an ill-ordered peace settlement which has kept Europe in a state of restless anxiety and irritability ever since. It is not only in time of war that there is need for that spirit of mutual forbearance. There is such a thing as an economic and political crisis as well as a military one, and at the present time it is hardly too much to say that the world is suffering from both an economic and a political crisis. It is that which has broken the peace and has brought about a state of international anarchy which has brought about a state of international anarchy which has brought about a state of international anarchy.

It is not too late for the introduction of another note into the contest, and, if introduced, it is difficult not to believe that it would receive such a welcome from the general body of the people as would repay the men who had the courage and vision to make use of it. It is entirely to the credit of Mr. Headley that he sounded the note in these two speeches of his, and it is much to be hoped that there will be an answering echo from other quarters. It would be all for the good of the public life of Canada and of her citizens.

IS IT PEACE?

The conference at Locarno in Switzerland between Germany and the Allied nations has resulted in a treaty which may be of real importance in the history of the world. Put shortly, it is a treaty by which the nations concerned bind themselves not to make war on one another in order to alter the arrangements made up under the Treaty of Versailles in 1919. Germany, France and Belgium agree not to attack one another or to indulge in warlike preparations against the Rhine frontiers, and Britain and Italy guarantee that arrangement. France is therefore at last given the guarantee which she expected and was promised at the time of the Versailles Treaty, but which fell through owing to the United States refusing to ratify the Treaty.

The setting up of courts of justice within the nations has not done away with all crimes and violence. In some cases these courts are conspicuously failing to curb those forces. Yet they have done an enormous amount in that direction, and in the same way the new agreement between the nations will certainly not mean permanent peace and the end of all war, but it may mean the making of war much less frequent and much less lightly entered on. If even that is achieved, then men may have cause to regard the conclusion of this latest international agreement as a landmark in human progress.

NOTHING MORE
They were out for a hike, the dog and John, when they came across a farm house on fire. An elderly man standing on the front porch was quite oblivious to the smoke and flames. John quipped naturally called out, "Hey, mister, your house is on fire!" The man did not seem to have heard John, however, so he repeated the news lustily, the dog barking along co-operatively. "How's that?" answered the farmer, placing his hand behind his ear and looking at the house. "Your house is on fire," John said again. "Is there anything else," was the impatient reply. "No," John hollered, "that's all I can think of just now."

an immense accession of strength to that rather frail young organization. If, on the other hand, she comes with the intention of using the League merely as a means of agitation for the recovery of her old position in the world, and particularly of her colonies now under mandate to Britain, France and Japan, then she will not be a source of strength but of weakness to the League, which will gradually split up into opposing groups and become more or less useless as the old and rightly despised "Concert of Europe" was. It is only fair to give Germany credit for the better spirit until there is clear evidence to the contrary. Her present leaders, Luther and Stresemann, seem to be showing a considerably more moderate attitude to all foreign powers, as if they had made up their minds that for the present at any rate Germany must accept the verdict of the victorious field of battle, and retain her world position, if she is to regain it, by other means than war. At the same time it is a matter for grave consideration whether a great nation like Germany can so change her whole temper and reconcile herself to a prolonged period of inferiority to nations whom for generations she has heartily despised. The Poles are the chief of such nations, and it is the problem of Poland which evidently gave the greatest trouble to the Conference. Poland's territory is immensely rich both from an agricultural and a mineral standpoint. The Poles are a fierce and warlike people, and their territorial position is one of extreme peril. They lie between Germany, Germany, both old enemies, who have twice already divided up their country, destroyed their freedom, and would quite probably be ready to do so again if they thought there was a favorable chance of success. Russia in particular is a standing menace to Poland. France, on the other hand, needs Poland as a counterbalance to Germany, and there is therefore an alliance between France and Poland. Germany's territory lies between them and France has been constantly trying since the end of the Great War to secure for herself the right to transport troops across Germany to help Poland against Russia as the need arises. Germany has as firmly resisted the demand, and with some show of reason. The point does not appear to have been entirely settled, but Germany has not conceded the right. France is giving a separate guarantee to Poland, and it seems to have been left in doubt as to how Poland will stand with respect to the sea into the Baltic, but that would be a slow way and possibly a dangerous one.

In any event the net result of the new Treaty seems to be that Europe gets something like a new chance. This treaty is an effort to get rid of century-old enmities and substitute for them joint national effort to put an end to wars and substitute for them an established recognized system of international arbitration. It is, of course, entirely right. Whether it will be entirely successful is another thing. There can be no confident anticipation of world peace as long as the whole vast section of the world stretching east from the Polish frontier to the Pacific Ocean is outside the comity of nations, and is either openly and bitterly hostile to it, as in the case of Russia, or in such a state of anarchy as is the case of almost anything, as in the case of China, where the only common feeling at present discernible is a growing spirit of aggressive nationalism, aiming first and foremost at the elimination of all foreign influence in the country.

The setting up of courts of justice within the nations has not done away with all crimes and violence. In some cases these courts are conspicuously failing to curb those forces. Yet they have done an enormous amount in that direction, and in the same way the new agreement between the nations will certainly not mean permanent peace and the end of all war, but it may mean the making of war much less frequent and much less lightly entered on. If even that is achieved, then men may have cause to regard the conclusion of this latest international agreement as a landmark in human progress.

NOTHING MORE
They were out for a hike, the dog and John, when they came across a farm house on fire. An elderly man standing on the front porch was quite oblivious to the smoke and flames. John quipped naturally called out, "Hey, mister, your house is on fire!" The man did not seem to have heard John, however, so he repeated the news lustily, the dog barking along co-operatively. "How's that?" answered the farmer, placing his hand behind his ear and looking at the house. "Your house is on fire," John said again. "Is there anything else," was the impatient reply. "No," John hollered, "that's all I can think of just now."

NO. 2 PACK WOLF CUBS

Recruits and Tenderpads.—All new boys, on joining, are called Recruits. When they have learned the laws, the rules and the how, they are called Tenderpads and may wear the uniform of the pack. A tenderpad is not only a member of the pack, but is one of the sixes forming that pack. A six is made up of six boys under a leader, called the sixer, and these boys stick together for work or play, and each six is called after a wolf by its color, as the black wolves, grey wolves, tawny wolves, etc. Each cub wears a triangular patch of cloth, the color of his six, on his shoulder. The six leader is the Alpha or old wolf of his six, and his orders must be obeyed. In between the regular meetings of the pack the sixers should arrange meetings of the sixes at times and places convenient to them, and instruct their sixes in star work and games, and help the tenderpads to pass star tests. The sixer should report his activities to the cubmaster. Star Badges.—A tenderpad may win and wear star badges, which show the progress he is making, and when he has won two stars he is a full-grown wolf cub. The two stars are worn on the cap, and to win the first cap has to be able to do these things—Know the composition of the Union Jack and the correct way to fly it; the following knots: Reef knot, sheet bend, clove hitch, and fisherman's knot; turn a somersault, leap frog, throw a ball with either hand, catch a ball with either hand; do two body exercises, know how and why to keep nails and teeth clean, and to breathe through the nose. Finally, to have at least three months' service as a wolf cub.

FOLLOW THE TRAIL

We started out one morning to climb a mountain, to witness the sunrise, which was said to be beyond description when seen from this mountain top. We started up the trail together, and the climb was easy and gradual. For me it was a little too slow, and as I was stronger than my friend, I struck out to cut corners and to make a dash for the top. For a while I made progress and left my friend behind, and concluded that there should be two ways up the mountain. But after an hour or so I found myself in what the mountain hiker calls a "pocket." To advance farther was impossible, as there was a sheer wall on either side. I sat down and "thought on my ways," and while meditating I heard a voice, and I looked up, there I saw my friend far above me, who saw that I was in a pocket. I heard him say, in a clear, gentle voice, "Follow the trail."

His advice was well taken. I went back down the mountain, regretting all the way the loss of time and elevation, till I reached the mountain of the rest of the way I followed the trail. As I climbed the mountain, reaching the top nearly an hour too late to see the sunrise, I sat down and began to soliloquize as to how true my experience that morning had been to climbing the mountain of life. For the most part, we enjoy being on the mountain top of Christian experience. With Peter we can say, "It is good for us to be here." But the question is, which way shall we take to ascend the mountain of Christian experience? In short, I might say, "Follow the trail." And for these reasons:

(a) The trail is a narrow path from bottom to top, not a beaten road or paved street for an automobile to speed over, but a footpath that is beyond the road. Many are travelling the highways of life, but the Christian takes the trail.

"Narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

(b) The trail denotes sacrifice. Some one has had to blaze the trail through the woods; some one has had to make the "uneven level and the rough places plain" for others to follow.

Provincial Farmers' Party Meeting

HON. GEO. HOADLEY ADDRESSES BIG GATHERING

A meeting in the interests of the Farmers' party in the district was held in McBride hotel hall on Thursday night. It had been expected that Premier Greenfield would have addressed the meeting, but, owing to cabinet business, he was unable to do so, and the Honorable George Hoadley, Minister of Agriculture, took his place. The meeting was well attended, the hall being full except for one or two of the front benches. G. W. Smith, M.L.A., presided, and very shortly introduced Mr. Hoadley, saying that as he himself would have two meetings in the district all to himself on Friday, he would not waste any time in speaking that evening, but would leave the meeting to Mr. Hoadley.

Mr. Hoadley began by expressing his pleasure at being again in Red Deer. On at least some previous occasions he was here as a Conservative. It was not extraordinary for him to be in the Farmers' Government. The only real discredit which a man could suffer under in regard to his political convictions was the discredit of not having sufficient interest in public affairs to belong to any party. He proposed that they should exist with the Government record. The Government had been criticized for being slow in arriving at decisions, but they preferred to take time to do so rather than endanger the future of the Province by hasty decisions. If there had been more of this caution in public affairs in the past, there would be less public debt today. The real estate deals of 1912 and the rash municipal expenditure for which we were now all paying were instances of hasty decisions.

The Government had been condemned in the same way for not deciding hastily to spend $12,000,000 of public money on the Spray Lakes project, but they wished to make a wise decision as to the initial policy, because such a policy would pursue the project to its end, and, as had happened in the case of such enterprises as the E.D. & B.C. railway and the Lacombe and North-Western railway, which were quite unnecessary enterprises, but which were now the loss.

colonization railways, and ought to have been built by the Dominion, which had control of the natural resources. The Province came to guarantee the bonds of these railways, and in consequence had to take them over. They were now costing the Province $1,700,000 a year.

Even although the Farmers' Government had had to face obligations of this character on coming into office, they had succeeded in arriving within $300,000 of balancing their budget in this year, and but for the railway debt they would have balanced it. It was unfair to compare Saskatchewan's balanced budget with that of Alberta, because Saskatchewan had no railway debt and no government telephone department, while ten of the services given through the department of agriculture in Alberta were given through the University in Saskatchewan.

As far as criticism of the Government was concerned, he wished to pay a tribute to the fairness of the weekly press, but he regretted that he could not say the same of the daily press. When the Farmers' Government came into power in 1921, the budget had been already passed. The Provincial Treasurer of the previous Liberal Government, Mr. C. R. Mitchell, now leader of the opposition, forecast in that budget a surplus of $42,000. In point of fact the year ended with a deficit of over $2,000,000. In Mr. Mitchell's last budget $16,000,000 had been borrowed, and the Farmers' Government had to find $900,000 of interest on that amount in 1922. They had met all these liabilities, had given better service, or at least as good service in all departments, and yet had got the budget to within $380,000 of the balance. He asked whether it was reasonable to suggest that in the course of three years, which were years of economic depression, the Government should have been able to get rid of the debts accumulated in 16 years of spending under the Liberal Government. They could have balanced the budget in the last two years if they had taken strenuous measures in respect to debts owing to the Province, but they thought that some leniency should be shown to such debtors.

He attributed the defeat of the Government candidates in the Medicine Hat election to the bad weather preventing the farmers from voting. It had been suggested that the refusal of the Government to continue giving seed grain relief to the south was the cause of their defeat. For that refusal the Government was responsible, because the continuation of relief was merely a waste of money, as another crop failure in the south this year has shown to them. He gave a number of figures to show what a great drain on the public finances was involved in the giving of relief in such measures as the so-called Cow Bill. This drain the Government had put a stop to.

With respect to the savings which had been effected by the Government, he pointed out that there were 503 fewer persons employed by the Government than in 1921, which involved a saving of $856,000. He gave a number of other figures as to the expenditure of the Government, and showed that only one dollar in every three paid by the consumers for goods could be called controllable expenses. The remaining two-thirds was expenditure which the Government could only avoid by repudiating the public debts. Under such circumstances the Government was not satisfactory that they had come even near to balancing the budget. He challenged Mr. Mitchell to deny this if he could.

He gave further figures of Government savings as compared with their predecessors. The grants to the farms in 1921 came to $154,000. In 1924 they came to only $65,000, and the success of the farms was not affected. Such savings, though small in themselves, were an important indication of the Government's general economy. He had closed four out of six of the agricultural schools in the Province because he found that in all schools there were not enough scholars for two, and he had prevented this causing any hardship by paying the fares of the intending students from their own district to the schools still open at Claresholm and Oids. As a result the cost of the schools had been reduced from $391,000 in 1921 to $78,000 in 1923.

The telephone department was another instance of this. In 1921 the Liberal Government had on hand 445,000 telephone poles, a stock which was grossly excessive, and it was difficult to suggest any defensible reason for these being bought. They were not bought for the ordinary purposes of the system. The Farmers' Government sold off all except the stock for three years, but they found that poles which cost $1.40 could be sold for only 33c, and this loss was all through the sale of the poles. Why such prices had been paid by the previous Government could not properly be explained. The Government had reduced the cost of elections greatly. Thus the election of 1921, under the Liberal Government, cost $248,000. The plebiscite on the question of Government control, held under the Farmers' Government with the same voting machinery, cost only $133,000. They had saved over $100,000 in respect to printing and stationery. He alluded to the Dominion election and a circular sent out by P. Burns & Co., directed against the Australian trade and its effect on the daymen of the Province, but said that he was not going to discuss Dominion questions except to say that it was possible that the Progressives might hold the balance of power in the new parliament, even if they were few in numbers.

With respect to the Spray Lakes project, he pointed out that the control of the water was in the hands of the Dominion Government, which had been repeatedly asked by the Alberta Government to grant them a license to make use of the water or to give power to others to make use of it and the Dominion Government had evaded the request on every occasion. In the same way Sir Henry Thornton had either opposed the trial shipments of Alberta coal to Ontario or had insisted that no accounts be kept with respect to such shipments as were made. It also seemed as if Sir Henry Thornton did not wish the cost of moving the coal to be made public.

He then dealt with co-operative marketing and laid great stress on the necessity for a constant high quality of goods to command the world's markets. He pointed out that Danish butter shipped to England was never examined provided it had the regulation stamp of quality on the outside of the boxes. In the case of the New Zealand butter, one box in ten on an average was opened and examined. In the case of Canadian butter, every box and every package were examined. One produce dealer in Britain said that he could get the best butter in the world from Paillesen in Calgary or from Edmonton, but only for one month in the year, and he had also been advised that Western farmers ought to ship their butter by the Pacific coast and the Panama Canal to avoid getting it mixed with the inferior Ontario butter. He then gave a short and interesting description of farming conditions in Denmark and pointed out in particular the extreme cleanliness, care and systematic methods of Danish farming. The average yield of the Danish cows was 8,000 pounds of milk a year, with a 2.8 percentage of butter yield.

Hogs were looked after most carefully and were graded only on the book. As a result of the Danish system of marketing, the producers received from 70 to 75 per cent of the price paid by the consumers for the hogs in Alberta, producers thought themselves very lucky if they got 40 per cent of the prices paid by consumers. He gave further particulars of Dutch farming, particularly vegetable growing, and the manner in which the Dutch farmers managed to ship their produce quickly and cheaply to London at a cost less than was paid by farmers living only 50 miles out of London.

With respect to the wheat market, he said that Eastern Canada was very anxious as to the grain trade of the West, and one authority had said that the loss of the Eastward haul of the grain would be a very serious one for the Canadian railways, but he pointed out that it would be very serious for people here if that haul was to be maintained at their own expense. In his opinion Alberta grain growers could send all their wheat by the Westward route and the remainder of the grain growers of Canada could send theirs to Montreal and still give Montreal all that it could possibly handle. There was no excuse for 177,000,000 bushels of Canadian wheat passing through Buffalo in a year and thereby giving the people of the United States $46,000,000 not paid on the traffic. The United States was getting British mail at 1 1/2 to 3 per cent for short loans during the grain marketing period, while the Alberta post was paying 6 per cent to the Canadian banks. While he was in London, Lloyd had told him that whatever the insurance rates were on wheat, Canada and the United States, they would give insurance on wheat stored in England at a rate 1 per cent less, and he was also assured that all the storage capacity needed would be provided in England at the same price as in the United States.

He suggested that the farmers of Britain were losing by the failure to use the by-products of milling for their stock as was done in Denmark and Holland. Great Britain had plenty of capital and great resources in young men who were quite unable to find work at home. No better place for these young men could be found than Canada. We were accustomed to speak of depression here, but in point of fact the people of Canada did not know what hardship meant. To see such it was necessary to go to some of the great cities of Great Britain and Europe. If we took the right steps, we could get all the capital that was wanted in Canada.

He had not much to say about the alleged shortcomings of the Government. He did not consider that there was anything to explain. The great lesson which the world was learning was that the essential duty of each individual was to see that the people with whom he came in contact got some benefit from his existence and his work. Coordination was the main secret of happiness and security, and security was the most valuable possession any people could have. Only by standing together could that security be obtained. (Applause.) G. W. Smith expressed the thanks of the meeting to Mr. Hoadley for his excellent speech, and a formal vote of thanks was moved by Harry Wallace, seconded by Ralph Peterson, and heartily accorded. The meeting terminated by the singing of the National Anthem.

HOGS
With the weather having cleared a little during the week, prices on both Calgary and Edmonton yards have slumped, the former paying $10.00 for thick smooth hogs, a 10 per cent premium for bacon, and the latter quoting $12.00 to $12.25, with the bacon premium.

SHEEP
Prices have not changed at either market, and hogs are not heavy.

GRAIN
Values are very jerky lately, being first up and then down. They seem to be based on the weather in west, consequently the different more means. Threshing started in some districts but had to be discontinued again. Two or three fine days would see its resumption.

BUTTER-CREAM-CHEESE
Creamery Butter—Quotations are unchanged, but creamery men are looking for a drop. Export market shut off, so must open a trade with the coast. Dairy Butter—No receipts reported outside of what the farmers market on Saturdays. Cream—Receipts are light and market seems to be unsettled. Cheese—Market unchanged.

EGGS-POULTRY
Eggs—No change in price has taken place. Storage eggs are providing most of the demand, but it is rumored that B.C. pullet eggs were on the market this week. Poultry—The big demand is for the heavy birds, but farmers are expecting good prices later, as they are holding the best stuff.

POTATOES
Bad roads held up deliveries, and prices range from $20 to $24 a ton, sometimes a premium over this.

Wool

LACOMBE NOTES

(Intended for last week)
A dance held at Healing's new house last Friday was well attended by all the neighbors and friends in the district, who were all in high spirits and enjoyed a very good time.
Mrs. DeBier's worthy Grand Mother of the Grand Chapter of Alberta, Order of the Eastern Star, paid an official visit to Alexander Chapter No. 1 on Friday evening, October 2. Mrs. DeBier is a woman of a very pleasant personality. While in Lacombe she was entertained at the home of Mrs. R. L. Ramsey.
The tennis club of Lacombe will hold a dance on Friday, October 18.
Mr. S. G. Tobin, who is standing in this constituency in the interests of the Liberal party, is well favored and is known to many citizens of our district. Mr. Tobin has been tireless in his work for his constituents and has represented Lacombe in the provincial legislature for several years. No meetings have so far been announced by the people of Lacombe who will have the opportunity of hearing Mr. Tobin in the near future.
The first anniversary meeting to be held in this district in the present campaign will be at Rimby on Friday evening when Messrs. Chas. Russell, Conservative candidate; W. J. Leggie and Andrew Gilmour will address the electors.

In spite of the bad roads and dismal outlook, the eighth annual sheep sale, held by the Central Alberta Wool Growers' Association, was very successful. The bidding was brisk and good prices were realized, and everything points to another successful sale next year, as there is much enthusiasm created among the farmers for the wool industry.

Raw Recruit (who sees the belated comrade) presents and shouts: "Halt! Who goes there?"

TOLD THE OFFICER HIS DUTY

The day was wearing late when Tam emerged somewhat unsteadily from a friend's door, jumped into his car and, slightly oversteering the mark, planted himself solemnly in the shadow fence. The watchful village policeman approached him and said in kindly tones, "No, Tammas, you'll need to come out of that; you're not fit to drive." "Mind your own business," was the rejoinder, and then, in magisterial tones, Tam continued, "It would suit you better to catch a thief than to hinder my driving home."

FARMING NOTES

The Central Cooperative Marketing Association last week shipped three cars of hogs to Calgary. The market was poor owing to the large quantities sent in and is likely to remain poor this week.

Throughout the Red Deer district a certain amount of threshing was done last week in spite of the broken weather. Some of the grain threshed was in doubtfully at condition, but the farmers are evidently afraid that before they are finished, the snow and winter will catch them. The snow of Saturday did not extend further north than Blackfalds, and this district appears to have had far worse weather in the last few weeks than districts further north. East of Stettler there has been little of the wet and broken weather, and threshing has been carried on without interruption. Between Stettler and Red Deer the weather seems to have been much as it was around Red Deer itself.

THE PROFITABLE FEEDER STEER

(Experimental Farms Note.) That there is good money in feeding steers of the right type has been demonstrated at the Dominion Experimental Farm Station at Scott. At this station during a period of eight years an average net profit of $15.40 per head has been realized. In order to realize a substantial profit in feeding and marketing, steers of recognized head type are required. Poor doing, unthrifty animals cost more to feed, spoil the appearance of the lot as a rule, are difficult to dispose of, and obviously are a losing proposition to the owner. It is, therefore, evident that when purchasing steers to place in the feed lot some experience is necessary in order to detect these undesirable individuals, and farmers who are not skilled buyers will usually find it more profitable to purchase steers through a reliable stock commission firm. The losses incurred through ignorance of the market demands are appalling, and the failure to give sufficient attention to the sorting of the steers into carload lots which are uniform as to breed, color, type, and age, contributes largely to these losses.

Both in this country and in the Old Country the market shows a decided preference for the heavy-weight butcher steer, and the highest prices are paid for steers not exceeding 1,300 pounds in weight. Steers of this description can be disposed of more readily and profitably, as the smaller cuts of meat are preferred by the consuming public, and there is less waste. The big steer, which the Great Britain trade terms the "carcase bullock," is not desired by the average butcher.

HANDLING THE BREEDING FLOCK

(Experimental Farms Note.) The success of the breeding flock depends entirely on the management. Good feed and care materially influence the subsequent lamb crop.

Soon after weaning, when the ewes have been carefully dried up, the breeding flock should be culled, separating the poor milking and poor breeding ewes from the main flock. In preparation for breeding, the ewes should be fed a little grain and should have access to a good succulent pasture, such as rape or second growth alfalfa. However, where succulent pastures are not available, good cuttable stubble will serve the same purpose. Previous to mating, the ewes should have their hindquarters trimmed free of all superfluous wool and dirty tags in order to prevent malingering. After breeding is completed, the rams should be removed from the flock, and the ewes carried along in good thrifty condition until lambing time, when they may be fed such succulent feeds as roots and alfalfa for the purpose of stimulating milk production. The loose wool should be trimmed from the flanks and under before lambing, as this gives the young lamb a better chance to secure nourishment.

Inflammatory troubles are more prevalent at lambing time with the highly conditioned flock than with the flock in good thrifty condition. Keep the breeding flock in good condition by careful and judicious feeding.

SCHOOL NOTES

The Convention of the Teachers in Mr. Gibson's Inspectorate is being held this week, and in consequence the schools will have a holiday on Thursday and Friday. In the opinion of the pupils there are not so many of these conventions as there ought to be. They consider that it is worthy to the advantage of their dear teachers to meet and discuss great problems of education, and while this does indeed involve the necessity for the pupils being unable to drink at the fountain of knowledge for a day or two, they are ready to put up with this deprivation in the interests of the noble cause.

There will be a half holiday next week also on account of election day. It is right and proper in the opinion of the pupils that there should be frequent appeals to the tribunal of popular judgment, and they entirely approve of the decision of the Government to make the day a half-holiday, but they think that it is a pity to do anything by halves.

The question of a suitable play to be performed this term is now exercising Mr. Locke's mind. It is understood that he is giving favorable thought to the play of "Pickwick Papers." It makes a most amusing play and is quite suitable for school performances. In fact this editor's second appearance on the stage was at the mature age of ten in this play. He was as good as Sam Weller, and he has vivid memories of having to sit on a large silk hat and squash it flat, and also to carry on a vigorous flirtation with Mrs. Cluppins, a sour and vinegary female witness in the trial. The editor might mention that his first appearance on the stage was made as a fairy in a little blue suit, with a silver wand with a star on the top of it. As Charles Lamb says in one of his "Essays of Elia," "God help thee, Elia; how art thou changed."

In a Grade IX composition last week there occurred the following phrase: "Wolfram Webber grew famous cabbage as was the root of his family." It is to be hoped that both the cabbage and the family had good sound hearts.

Mr. Locke revealed a grim secret in his past life last week when in demonstrating the use of a distilling apparatus he mentioned that it might be used for the distilling of alcohol, and a little later on added carelessly that he himself had often used it. He was, of course, being a little bit naughty with the school trustees and the rest of the staff!

Last week there was a variation on the theme of "Chum" and his little lamb, when "Chum," Bill Parson's dog, came to school and succeeded in entering the room where Bill was at work. The teacher in charge ordered Bo's Hepworth to throw the intruder out, but "Chum" ignored Bo's appeals to follow him, and remained quietly beside his owner until Bill himself conducted him to the door and despatched him home.

One of the chief excitements in the High School last week was the party given by Dennis Seel and Lyman McVillar in Mrs. Turner's studio on Friday evening. Some 60 young people attended, including the greater part of Grade IX, and thoroughly enjoyed themselves.

Marjorie Gault got an arithmetic question right last week and attributed that striking phenomenon to her having accidentally got in the way of a general brain wave passing through the class room. Marjorie is unduly severe on herself. Mathematical ability is not the only kind in existence. There are brilliant mathematicians who can hardly write two consecutive sentences of intelligible English, and conversely some of the cleverest students of literature and languages often find simple questions in algebra a hopeless obstacle.

Here and There

It is understood a Scottish syndicate has purchased sixteen acres of land adjoining the West residential section of Vancouver, B.C., and will erect one hundred residences there.

Although only three years old the Oliver district of British Columbia has already become noted for the production of very fine cantaloupes. This year the production is expected to be about 25 to 30 carloads.

The 1,250,000-bushel Government Terminal elevator being built at Prince Rupert, B.C., will be completed by November 1st, when a test shipment of ten carloads of grain will be made through it.

Notification has been received by Hon. John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario, that his showing of white Wyandottes at the New York State Fair at Syracuse, had captured the trophy for the best display for the twentieth consecutive year.

By a recent Order-in-Council of the Lieutenant-Governor, premiums for clearing land, which had previously been set at $6 an acre, were increased to $8. The Order also provides that the premium will be paid for a maximum of twenty acres of land and, as a result of it, a settler may obtain a grant of $160 from the Government as a reward for his work.

Considerable progress has been made during the past few years by R. M. Palmer, at Cowichan Bay, B.C., in the cultivation and propagation of new species of gladioli. In his garden, Mr. Palmer has the present growing about 150 different varieties, bulbs having been secured from all parts of the world, even Central Africa contributing its quota to this wonderful collection.

Having completed their tour of Canada as the guests of E. W. Beatty, chairman and president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the ten British journalists left Canada early in October for England, to relate the story of their experiences and to give their readers the impressions they have gained of the Dominion.

During the month of August 1,332 vessels, comprising 131 trans-Atlantic, 35 coasting and 966 inland steamers, entered the port of Montreal, these having a total net registered tonnage of 1,556,945, while in the same period 1,141 vessels went out, these representing 1,932,145 net registered tons. Since the opening of navigation 757 ocean-going vessels, representing 3,468,965 net tons, have entered the port, as compared with only 649, representing 2,280,072 net tons last year; these figures being up to the midnight of September 5th.

F. F. Norcross, a well-known Chicago lawyer, had an amazing experience recently while staying at the Banff Springs Hotel and playing on the golf course there. His approach to the ninth hole was disturbed by a huge bull elk which tossed its antlers and stood pawing the ground with evident hostility as the lawyer prepared to play his ball. Mr. Norcross was about to observe the better part of valor when the bull's attention was distracted by the appearance of a cow elk which made an effective substitute for the golfer and both animals disappeared into the neighboring bush.

ROD AND GUN

The Kennel Department of the November issue of "Rod and Gun," the Canadian hunting magazine, contains a notable feature in an article on the Canadian field trials of bird dogs from the pen of A. F. Hochwalt, who may be said to be the greatest field authority on the American continent. The winter feature, "Along the Trap Line," edited by M. U. Bates, commences its season in this month's issue and contains a full synopsis of the trapping laws for the season 1925-26 all through the Dominion. The first of a series of splendid cartoons on the humorous side of outdoor life, by the famous James Price of Birdseye Centre fame, is also a good new feature.

The November issue might be called a hunter's number from the amount of hunting interest it contains. An "Old Timer's Story of Hunting in the Rockies" is a real old timer's yarn, written in a care-free style that marks the man of the open and interests his fellows. In "Breeze from the West" A. Bryan Williams, the well known B.C. sportsman, strikes the same note that is felt in all the stories and regular features of the magazine.

LACOMBE NOTES

The death of Mrs. H. F. Flowells on Sunday at 3 a.m. after an illness of several months, was keenly felt by her many relatives and friends, who considered her an old timer in the development of the district, she having come here in 1892 from Guelph, Ontario.

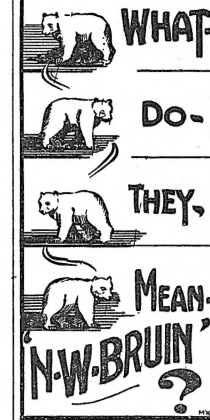

The Women's Institute will hold a tea and sale of home cooking on Saturday, Oct. 24th, in the Lacombe Fairgrounds.

Mrs. Fong, sister of Wain Chung, has returned to Lacombe, where she will join her brother in the business of the Hop Chung Cafe.

The annual Thanksgiving Service was held in the English Church, Lacombe, last Sunday, the Communion and evening service being conducted by Rev. Hickson.

A car driven by Mrs. Sayers, of Ponoka, overturned near the bridge east of Lacombe, just below the cemetery. The car was approaching town and on coming in contact with some dangerously rough ground Mrs. Sayers lost control of the machine. It was a McLaughlin Six, and it turned completely over, pinning the six occupants underneath. Mrs. Sayers suffered a broken wrist, but the other passengers escaped with a bad shaking up.

Threshing is general this week, and the grain is turning out much better than was expected, particularly the wheat, which is averaging about 40 bushels to the acre. The oats and barley are fair.

Sporting Notes

Chicago Cubs won the city series against the White Sox when they beat them 5 games out of 6.

Forseti, a French horse, won the Cesarewitch stakes in England out of a field of 33.

At the Alberta University track meet, Cliff Osterlund, formerly of Red Deer, won 2 firsts, 3 seconds and 1 third. He was selected for the team going to Winnipeg for the intercollegiate meet.

Leo Roy, featherweight champion of Canada, defeated Edward Mascart, European champion, in a fast ten-round bout at Montreal, after Mascart nearly had him out in the ninth round.

The players of the Hamilton Hockey Club, suspended last winter, are still under suspension.

Harry Grob, world's middleweight champion boxer, and Mickey Walker, welterweight champion, are matched for a return bout on Dec. 8 or 9.

Captain Bowey, English motor racer, broke three world's records at the Brooklands track, England: He averaged 115.45 miles per hour.

The Pittsburgh Pirates won the World series when they took the seventh game from Washington Senators 7-1. Score by innings: Washington ... 400 200 010-7 7 2 Pittsburgh ... 003 001 235-9 15 2

The annual meeting of the Alberta Amateur Hockey Association will be held in Calgary Nov. 11th.
